INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 6.—Opposite the Government building in this city hangs a medest sign which announces that "B. Harrison. Lawyer," has his office there. The modesty and terseness of this sign are characteristic of the man whose name and calling it denotes, "Is Gen. Harrison in?" "Yes," replies the clerk, pointing to the open door. Before you sits a stocky, hearded man, with a large head and a very short neck. He is 5 feet 7 inches Itali, and weight 190 pounds. You are not invited to take a soat. It is presumed that if you want to sit down you will do so unasked. The stocky, bearded man does not open his meuth until you have finished stating your business. He drops his work, pays close attention to what you have for say, grasps the matter readily, analyzes it quickly, decides promptly, and in a few terms sentences replies to your proposition or interrogatory.

Gen. Harrison is a modest man, else he weuld not content himself with a simple initial "B," upon his professional shingle. "B. Harrison is but a cold and insufficient appellation for a man known the country over as Benjamis Harrison, with the honerable prefix of General or Senator. Besides, Harrison is an historic pame, going back to the days of the Dictator. The first Gen. Harrison, was one of Cromwell's trusted lieutenants. To be sure he was hanged, but not for a felony. Se unfortunate as to receive an appointment to sit on the Board of Commissioners to try Charles I. fer treason to Parliament, he did his duty, good Presbyterian that he was, by signing the King's death warrant. For this he paid with his life, being hanged by order of Charles II. Oct. 13, 1660. His descendants emigrated to America, and have been heard from on this side the water. Benjamin Harrison of Virginia was a member of the Hense of Eurgeesse, and later of the Colonial Con-period, he was one of the Declaration of Independence, was three times elected Governor of Virginia, and was a member of the Convention that ratified the Constitution. His son, will man Henry Harrison, won renown as soldier and statesman, and was the ninth Fresident of the United States. John Scott Harrison, son of the President, was the father of this modest lawyer, a worthy son of such sires, who is content with the initial "B." Gen. Harrison was born Aug. 20, 1838, on the Harrison homestead, near North Bend, a few miles below Cincinnati, where his father and grandfather were tilling the farm to which the latter had retired after a long career as Governor of the Northwestern Territory and in Congress. Young Benjamin was 7 years old when his grandfather was elected President in the famous log-cabin and hard-cider campaign, but remembers, even more distinctly than the stirring events of that year, a visit which he made to Cincinnati under the guidance of the President elect. Young Ben did not know much about cities then, and when his grandfather led him past an apple woman's stand the boy thought how good and kind it was of the woman to keep fruit for the refreshment of weary pedestrians. Un at North Bend nobody had ever thought of charging anybody anything for a few apples, and so Ben went up to the stand, coolly filled his pockets, and walked away.

anything for a few appleas, and so Ben went up to the stand, coolly filled his pockets, and walked away.

John Scott Harrison was a farmer—a worthy man, who was several times elected County Clerk—and his sons were reared as farmers, too. Young Ben attended the district schoel till he was 15, and then entered Miamil University, Oxford, Ohio, where, despite his youthfulness, he made rapid progress with his studies. At 18 he graduated, immediately took up the study of law in the office of Judge Bellamy Storer of Cincinnati, and here again manifested such unusual application that he was admitted to the bar before he had reached his majority. Not only that, but he had married as well, and his twenty-first birthday found himself a man of family and practically without resources, having only $200 or $300, advanced him by his father. But, in his unpretentious, self-contained, matter-of-fact way, the youth had always felt confidence in his ability to "take care of himself," and that same year he made his appearance in this city to commence the practice of law.

His was not an imposing figure at that time. A little, slender fellow, with a smooth face, a log, tow-white head, no neek to speak of, and only the rather incredible fact that he had a sehoolboy. He was poor, too, and for a long time lived in three rooms in a little old house, still standing, in Vermont street, near Alabama. Yet he was successful almost from the start. One of his carilest employments was by the Democratic Governor, Juseph A. Wright, in a legislative investigation, wherein he displayed much ability. Then he was so fortunate as to be selected for assistant prosecutor in the case of a woman charged with poisoning a man at the old Ray House—a case which excited a great deal of public interest. His success in that brought him clients, and of them he has since had no lack. Indeed, he has for ten or fifteen yoars been one of the foremest lawyers in the State, and, now that the Hendricks firm is broken up and ex-Senator McDonald largely out of the law, h

Morton met him on the street one day and said to him: "Ben. I want you to raise a regiment." He accepted this assignment, raised a company, was commissioned a Second Lieutenant, then a Captain, and then Colonel of the Seventeenth Indiana. With this regiment he went to the front, and though for some time he had little but guard or garrison duty to perform in Kentucky and Tennessee. an opportunity to show what stuff he was made of soon occurred and he was not found wanting. In the charge at Resea his regiment held the post of honor, where the bullets were thickest. "Our Colonel was right with us, too," says Moses McLain, who was wounded in that charge. "He came right up behind us when we captured the four guns there—the only guns. I believe, that were taken in the Atlanta campaign. We had to withstand a murderous cross firs, and as the gunners discharged their pieces we fell to the ground and allowed the shot to pass over us. Then we rushed up, scaled the works, and took possession of the guns. The boys tell a story of the General which I guess is true. They say that when we went into the works Harrison was with us, and that he grabbed a rebel gunner by the hair of his heard and yanked him out exclaiming: Come out of here, you blank blank rebely If this story is true, it is the only time I ever heard of the General untering an oath, but that he had strength enough to pull a lusty gunner over the works I do not doubt. Thirty years ago, as now, it was well-nigh impossible for a man to practise law in Indiana without also taking part in politics. Harrison took the stump for Frement, and again for Lincoln in 1860. Harrison was a Republican, and he threw himself into the new party with rare earnestnees and enthusiasm. In 1860 he was a caudidate for the office of Reporter of the Supreme Court, a position which he desired because it was is the line of his profession and would bring a needed increase of income. He succeeded in getting the nomination, and was elected. While he was absent in the field the Democratic Legislature of 1863 declared the office vacant, and elected another person to the place, but in 1864 the people reflected Harrison. He served till 1858, and then declined a reflection. Aimost from his first appearance in the State he was taken into the opunsels of the party and the local politicians. He made many political speches, assisted in the management of the State Committee, and gradually grow in premisese, until in 111.

paign. That was the year of Tilden and Hendricks, and of course Harrison was beaten. This campaign greatly extended his acquaintance and reputation among the people, and he was now recognized as the coming man of the party.

In 1880 he was elected to the Senate, and served six years in that body, gaining a national reputation as a good lawyer and strong debater. The Legislature to choose his successor was to be elected in the fall of 1885. That campaign was a memorable one. The Domocrats had districted the State so as to accure a large majority on joint ballot, and most of the prominence lepublicans thought the result of the prominence in the belief that the State could be carried and the Legislature woon, and he made a brilliant struggle to that end. On the bonular vote the Republicans did carry the State by a small majority, but lost the Legislature by the slender margin of two votes on joint ballot.

Gen, Harrison is not an orator, though he is an effective speaker. His greatest successes have been at the bar, where learning and logic counted for more than rhetoric or wit. Of late years he has cultivated the quality of entertaining as well as convincing, and can now make a speech to delight a miscellaneous audience. He possesses a remarkable faculty of turaing his mind quickly and completely from ene matter to another. The case of Miss Cora E. Fiske, a school teacher of Flushing, against Charles W. Bardeen, the editor of the School Bulletin, was on trial in the Supreme Court in Long Island City yesterday, Miss Fiske claims $10,000 damages for a publication in Bardeen's paper reflecting upon her competency as a school teacher and accusing her of falling to pay him money due as a commission for obtaining her two places. The story was headed "A Bouncing Baby," and in it Miss Fiske was accussed of pleading the "baby act" in a suit he had brought for his commissions, and in which she had pleaded that she was under age. Miss Fiske, who is handsome and now about 20 years old, was represented by District Attorney Benjamin Downing.

Superintendent Pardee of the Long Island Public Schools testified that he had received marked copies of the paper containing the article complained of. Similar testimony was given by John Lyons, Mrs. Skidmore, a teacher Bardeen testified that the had been attacked in the South Side Observer, and that the article complained of was a reply. Justice Barnard decided that the article in the South Side Observer had nothing to do with the case. Testimony to show that Bardeen had no claim against Miss Fiske, for the reason that he had never rendered any service, was not admitted. On cross-examination Mr. Bardeen said that on Nov. 24 he wrote to Skaneateles recommending her as a good school teacher, and through his letter she obtained a place. A. S. Downing, a school teacher of Elmira, was called by the defence to prove Miss Fiske's incompetency. He said that in 1885 he was superintendent of the public school at Fairport, N. Y. He had written to Mr. Bardeen, asking him to send him a teacher. An attempt was made to introduce the letters which passed between the defendant and the winess, but to this Mr. Downing stronucusly objected, and he was upheld by the Court. The letters, it is said, contained aspersions upon Miss Fiske's capacity as a teacher. Mr. Downing said Miss Fiske was deficient in grammar, and that she could not control her pupils. He was confronted with a letter dated Jan. 30, 1885, in which he recommended Miss Fiske as a teacher who was thoroughly competent, and who had been more than successful in her tutorage of pupils.

Reuben Maynard of Deposite, New York, was next called by the defence. His name, he said, was formerly McGuuffis, but he had it changed by act of Legislature in 1885, He had been introduced, he said, to Miss Fiske by Mr. Bardeen, He had letters she had sent him respecting as engagement as a teacher in his school, but although netified to produce them in court he failed to do so. When closely questioned on this point he became very excited. He identified several letters she had sent him respecting as engagement as

Besides, the weather was unprepitious, and the Government crop report was not encouraging. The most discouraging feature of the market was its return to the almost absolute control of the local operators, most of whom are Board room traders, whose financial standing is as variable as the fluctuations they endeavor to scalp upon, and whose intelligence is entirely devoted to supplementing the operations of the law of gravitation. The situation was not, however, devoid of cheering incidents, since the export movement both of our products and securities seems to be increasing, as will be noted by statements given below. The bond market showed a good deal of vigor despite the drifting character of the limited speculation in stocks, and some of the most conservative commission houses are unostentatiously advising their clients to pick up the better class of securities whenever a disposition to sacrifice them is shown. The eyes of Wall street, like those of the whole country, are straining at Washington for signs of relief from the burden that is weighing down everyinterest. Until it comes it seems useless to hope for a revival of general business, to say nothing of speculation. It was a belief that help was near at hand that the better nurket for securities last week reflected, while today's relapse into dulness tells more plainly than words of hope deferred.
